The Original Brooklyn Water Bagel Co., whose national spokesman is Brooklynite Larry King, now has another famous Brooklyn-born fan.

The Boca Raton-based company says that songstress, actress, director and all-around diva Barbra Streisand hired it to cater the wrap party that marked the end of the filming of her new movie, "My Mother's Curse," which will come out next spring.

Streisand plays the mother of actor Seth Rogen. The two hit the road so he can sell his latest invention – and, no, it's not Brooklynized water.

Barbra Streisand hired The Original Brooklyn Water Bagel Co. to cater the wrap party for "My Mother's Curse," which will come out next spring.

The bagels were supplied by the Original Brooklyn Water Bagel Co. in Beverly Hills, which King opened in March.

"It's an honor to have someone of Barbra Streisand's stature, and a fellow Brooklynite, recognize that our bagels, coffee and food are true to her roots," said Steve Fassberg, president and CEO of The Original Brooklyn Water Bagel Co. "Those of us who grew up in Brooklyn know the difference right away with just one taste."

The quick-service restaurant chain creates "Brooklynized" water, which is bottled and sold at the restaurants and used in all its products.

In case you were wondering, Brooklynized water is said to be softer than the hard water that comes out of most other taps, but the process is proprietary and no one is talking.

The company was founded in Delray Beach in 2009. In addition to the Beverly Hills location, it has two more franchised locations opening in California. It also has four other South Florida locations, with five more coming soon. It is also opening locations in Orlando, Atlanta and Baltimore, according to its website.
